The precepts were developed over a period of several years through a series of gatherings and consultations with Indigenous leaders from all over the world. The precepts are organized into seven categories:

1. Relationship with the Earth: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationship with the Earth and all living beings. They call for us to respect the Earth's ecosystems and to live in harmony with nature.

2. Relationship with each other: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationships with each other. They call for us to respect each other's cultures and traditions, and to work together to build a more just and equitable world.
3. Relationship with future generations: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationship with future generations. They call for us to make decisions that will benefit future generations, and to protect the Earth for their use and enjoyment.
4. Relationship with the spirit world: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationship with the spirit world. They call for us to respect the spirit world and to seek guidance from our ancestors.
5. Relationship with ourselves: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationship with ourselves. They call for us to be true to ourselves and to live our lives in a way that is meaningful to us.
6. Relationship with the Creator: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationship with the Creator. They call for us to be grateful for the gifts of the Creator and to live our lives in a way that honors the Creator.
7. Relationship with all things: These precepts focus on the importance of our relationship with all things. They call for us to respect all living beings and to live in harmony with the Earth.

The 28 precepts are a powerful call to action for all of us. They provide a roadmap for creating a more sustainable and just world. We must all work together to implement these precepts and to create a better future for all.
